This Month in Republic of Texas History

Friday, January 25, 1839:

Today, President Mirabeau B. Lamar signed an act establishing a new flag for the Republic of Texas. It consists of a blue vertical bar next to the staff, one-third of the flag's width, with a large, five-pointed white star in the center. The remainder consists of two horizontal bars, white above and red below. The present change to the colors of red, white, and blue reflect the affinity most Texans feel toward the United States, whose flag consists of these colors.

Texas Honor Days:

Mirabeau B. Lamar Day: January 26

Mirabeau B. Lamar helped shape the Republic of Texas through his leadership, vision, and lasting contributions. As vice president and later president of the republic (1838–1841), Lamar championed a strong, independent Texas rather than immediate annexation to the United States, emphasizing national pride and sovereignty. He is remembered as the “Father of Texas Education” for advocating public education and securing land grants that became the foundation of Texas’s public school system and future universities. Lamar also promoted the relocation of the capital to Austin, reinforcing Texas’s westward aspirations.
